

To analyze senatorial vote patterns across the Philippines, Tableau was used to visualize but election results were cleaned, transformed, then mapped.

The senatorial election results were analyzed then revealed regional preferences for top candidates. Bong Go (PDPLBN) secured the highest number of votes among the regions, winning BARMM, NIR, OAV, LAV, and Regions VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII, and XIII. Bam Aquino (KNP) was the next, capturing NCR, Region III, IV-A, V, and VI. Erwin Tulfo (LAKAS) claimed three, which are CAR, Region II, Region IV-B. Lastly, Imee Marcos (NP) secured the top spot in Region I.

Voter participation varies among the regions and demographics. The highest voter turnout was recorded in the province of Siquijor at 91.84%, followed by Abra at 91.55% and Camiguin at 90.60%. Meanwhile, overseas constituencies were included in the dataset and they have the lowest voter turnout; the North and Latin Americas recorded just 7.19%, while the Middle East and Africans saw only 19.50% of registered voters casting their ballots.

When examining ballot integrity and voting behavior, certain provinces exhibited unusually high error rates. Rizal registered the highest overvote rate in the country at 38.31%, with the National Capital Region's Third District keeping close at 36.58%. On the other end, Ilocos Norte emerged as the local province with the most unusually elevated undervote rate, meaning many voters actively chose not to complete their senatorial slate.

Party support heavily dictates the political landscape, effectively splitting the nation into two distinct camps. Candidates running as Independents (IND) consolidated massive support across Luzon and parts of the Visayas, dominating NCR, NIR, CAR, Region I, II, III, IV-A, IV-B, V, VI, and VIII. In contrast, the PDPLBN machinery secured Mindanao and the remaining Visayan territories, Region VII, IX, XI, X, XII, XIII, and BARMM, as well as the local and overseas absentee votes.

Lastly, the candidates who successfully dominated multiple provinces. Bong Go established the most widespread national presence by securing domination of 50 provinces. Bam Aquino followed with majorities in 25 provinces, while Erwin Tulfo managed to lock 9. The rest of the most dominant territorial candidates were Imee Marcos, who won 4 provinces, and Bato Dela Rosa, who claimed 3.
